Correct Clothes To Meet The Obligation Of Every Occasion Copyright 1925 by C. E. Way.

The "Wing Collar Man" Americans delight to pack a world of comment into a word capsule. Thus, colloquially speaking, we describe some types of people as a "wing collar man", or "a kid glove operator", or "a high hat guy". It paints the picture with the fewest strokes. However, expressions like these are unfair, because they imply that one who wears a wing collar, or kid gloves, or a high hat is half fop and complete snob, holding himself arrogantly above his fellows. Or, as Cowper put it, "His wit invites you by his looks to come, but when you knock, it is never at home". This may have been so once, but it is not true to-day when to dress smartly, becomingly and even richly is not a sign of supercilionsness, but of self-respect and success.

The wing collar was re-introduced a few years ago, because it is a form which favors some faces, especially the long, lean type, helping to give it breadth and fullness. It is not as complimentary to the short, round face to which the double-band collar and the four-in-hand scarf lend an appearance of length. Thus, correct dress fulfills its true function, which is to allow sufficient latitude to adopt styles which are becoming and avoid those which are not. Just because you have never worn the wing collar or because you fancy that it doesn't befit the cut of your jib don't assume that it is a priggish or outlandish style. On the contrary, it is a very smart shape, provided that one can wear it engagingly and effectively. That is a question to be decided between your face and your

Many men wear a wing collar having tabs which are too large or too small to suit their cast of features. The shape of medium dimensions should, usually, he selected. However, the sensible way to determine what sort of wing is the wing for you is trying on different collars, just as you would try on different hats to find the particular shape that magnifies your advantages and minimizes of your shortcomings,

Wear a bow-knot tie with your wing collar. The four-in-hand scarf looks too narrow for a standing collar having a wide spread in front, as distinguished from close-meeting shapes. The combination shown in the sketch is about right. Here you see the boldtab wing collar together with the tie of brightly spotted foulard pilk knotted snugly in the centre and worn over the wings. This effect looks softer and more natural than if the tie is arranged under the wings, but becomingness to the individual, net hard-and-
